6–7 OCEANIA

The continent of Oceania comprises Australia, New Guinea, New Zealand and the islands of the Pacific Ocean. The main Pacific island groups of Melanesia, Micronesia and Polynesia sit amongst the complex of ridges and troughs which make up the Pacific seafloor. Notable among these, and visible extending northwards from New Zealand, are the Kermadec and Tonga trenches – the latter reaching a depth of 10 800 m (35 424 ft) at Horizon Deep. Australia itself appears largely dry and barren, its vast interior consisting of several deserts, with brighter salt lakes in the low artesian basin of the east central area. The east coast of Australia, separated from the interior by the Great Dividing Range – the source of the continent's longest rivers the Murray and the Darling – is more densely vegetated. New Guinea is covered by dense tropical forest, while New Zealand displays a great variety of land cover types, most prominent being the snow-capped Southern Alps on South Island.

8–9 ASIA

This vast continent – the world's largest – covers an enormous area and contains a great variety of landscapes, evident on this image. It stretches from the Mediterranean Sea in the west to the far east of Russia and Japan, and from arctic Siberia in the north to the tropical islands of Indonesia. The Caspian Sea – the world's largest lake – is prominent in the west. The snow-capped Caucasus mountains stretching from the Caspian Sea to the Black Sea clearly mark the divide between Asia and Europe. Just east of the Caspian Sea lies the complex shape of the Aral Sea. This was once the world's fourth largest lake, but is now drastically reduced in size because of climate change and the extraction of water for irrigation. In the centre of the image, the long arc of the mountain ranges of the Himalaya, Karakoram, Hindu Kush and Tien Shan circle the featureless Tarim Pendi basin and the lake-riddled Plateau of Tibet.

10–11 EUROPE

The generally densely vegetated continent of Europe contains some dramatic geographical features. Its northern and western limits are marked by the complex coastlines of Iceland, Scandinavia and north-western Russian Federation, while the British Isles sit on the flat, wide continental shelf. Europe's mountain ranges divide the continent – in the southwest, the Pyrenees separate France from the drier Iberian Peninsula, the wide arc of the Alps separates Italy from the rest of western Europe, the Carpathian Mountains, appearing as a dark curve between the Alps and the Black Sea, mark the edge of the vast European plains, and the Caucasus, stretching between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea, create a prominent barrier between Europe and Asia. Two of Europe's greatest rivers are also clearly visible on this image – the Volga, Europe's longest river, flowing south from the Ural Mountains into the Caspian Sea and the Dnieper flowing across the plains into the northern Black Sea.

12–13 AFRICA

This image of Africa clearly shows the change in vegetation through the equatorial regions from the vas dry Sahara desert covering much of the north of the continent, through the rich forests of the Congo basin the second largest drainage basin in the world – to the high plateau of southern Africa. Lake Victoria dominat central east Africa and the Nile and its delta create a distinctive feature in the desert in the northeast. The path of the Great Rift Valley can be traced by the patter of linear lakes in east Africa, to Ethiopia, and along the Red Sea. The dark fan-shaped feature in central southern Africa is the Okavango Delta in Botswana – one of the world's most ecologically sensitive areas. To the east of the continent lies Madagascar, and in the Indian Ocean northeast of this is the Mascarene Ridge sea feature stretching from the Seychelles in the north to Mauritius and Réunion in the south.

14–15 NORTH AMERICA

Many well-known geographical features are identifiab on this image of North America, which also illustrates the contrasts in landscapes across the continent. Greenland, the world's largest island, sits off the northeast coast while the dramatic chain of the Aleuti Islands in the northwest stretches from Alaska across the Bering Sea to the Kamchatka Peninsula in the Russian Federation. Further south in the Pacific Ocea at the far left of the image, lie the Hawai'ian Islands and their very distinctive ocean ridge. There is a stron west-east contrast across the continent. The west is minated by the Rocky Mountains, which give way the Great Plains. In the east, the Great Lakes, the gest of which, Lake Superior, is second in size only the Caspian Sea, the valley of the Mississippi and the astal Plain are prominent.

–17 SOUTH AMERICA

e Andes mountains stretch along the whole length the west coast of South America, widening into the gh plains of the Altiplano in Bolivia and Peru in e centre of the continent. Lake Titicaca, the world's ghest large navigable lake, lies on the Altiplano, addling the Bolivia–Peru border. Running parallel the Andes, just off the west coast, is the Peru–Chile ench which marks the active boundary between the zca and South American tectonic plates. Movement tween these plates gives rise to numerous volcanoes the Andes. The Amazon river runs across almost the ole width of the continent in the north, meeting the antic Ocean in its wide delta on the northeast coast. e vast Amazon basin is one of the most ecologically verse areas of the Earth. In the south, the wide ntinental shelf stretches eastward from the tip of the ntinent to the Falkland Islands and South Georgia the bottom edge of the image.

–19 ANTARCTICA

otected by the Antarctic Treaty, implemented in 1959, om commercial exploitation and from the realization territorial claims, Antarctica is perhaps the world's eatest unspoilt, and relatively unexplored, wilderness. is image combines bathymetric data (incomplete some black areas) with a mosaic of over a thousand ndsat ETM+ scenes to show the extent of the ntinental ice sheet in an austral summer. oating sea ice is not shown. The Antarctic Peninsula – me to numerous scientific research stations – in the p left of the image reaching towards South America, the ge Ronne and Ross ice shelves, and the Transantarctic ountains – dividing the continent into West and East tarctica – are the dominant physical features.

–21 TROPICAL CYCLONES, AUSTRALIA is image mosaic from 11 March 2015 shows three opical cyclones across Australia. In the west is category cyclone Olwyn, which caused power losses in Western stralia on 13 March. Centrally is cyclone Nathan, hich was executing a cyclonic loop, and then in the east Pam. Cyclone Pam crossed Vanuatu on 13 March 2015 a category 5 storm. Winds speeds of 270 km per hour 55 mph) were reached as it approached Vanuatu and it t the eastern side of the island of Éfaté hardest. The pital city Port Vila on the same island was also hit hard. e island nation was crippled with an early estimate ggesting that around 90 per cent of buildings in the untry were affected in some way. Other south Pacific tions were also affected by cyclone Pam including valu and the Solomon Islands.

2–23 BADAIN JARAN DESERT, CHINA is desert in Inner Mongolia is a section of the Gobi esert and is unusual as a part of the desert area is ade up of mega dunes that are between 200 m and 0 m in height. The tallest measured so far is around 60 m (1500 feet) high making it about as high as the illis (Sears) Tower in Chicago, once the world's tallest uilding. The high dunes seem to be the result of a mplex process and scientists have suggested that the une height is not just due to the wind characteristics nd sand type, but is also affected by the shape of the edrock under the sand. These dunes also produce e rare phenomenon known as "singing dunes" or whistling sands" which start off sand avalanches. The kes in this desert are intriguing as there are over 100 f them and the water source is not obvious. Scientific esearch suggests it may be a combination of factors cluding groundwater, precipitation and snowmelt om local mountains and also paleowater.

24–25 LIGHTS AT NIGHT, EUROPE

The bright lights of Europe shine at night and illuminate the coastline very clearly in this composite image. Light was detected in a range of wavelengths and filters were then used to create a usable image that is not too bright. This image is part of a global composite that was created from data acquired by the Suomi National Polar-orbiting Partnership in 2012 and made available in October 2014. Certain cities are very clear such as Moscow, Paris, Madrid and Athens. Others make up part of a much larger bright area as can be seen in Belgium and the Netherlands and also in northern Italy. Transport barriers such as the Alps and the Pyrennees stand out as dark patches with slivers of light in the valleys. Many of the main transport routes are easily identified with the route between Moscow and St Petersburg showing up particularly well. However there are also areas of light in unexpected places. The North Sea oil platforms show clearly and some of the lights in the sea may be groups of fishing trawlers.

26–27 ARQUIPÉLAGO DOS BIJAGÓS, GUINEA-BISSAU

The coast of Guinea-Bissau is an area with many mangrove swamps. These are important feeding grounds for marine creatures such as oysters and for birds like heron and flamingo, and the mammal the African manatee. However, the mangrove swamps are threatened as trees are cut down for timber or to clear land for agriculture. The main river in this image is the Geba, which has a wide estuary. The ancient delta of the Geba formed the Arquipélago dos Bijagós or Bissagos Islands some of which can also be seen. The Orango Islands, which are also a National Park, are at the very bottom of the image and look a little like a tree in shape and are the home to the rare saltwater hippopotamus. The archipelago has been a UNESCO Biosphere Reserve since 1996 due to the diversity of mammals, birds, reptiles and fish found there. The area is recognized as the most important African site for Green sea turtles to lay their eggs and it is estimated that there are around ten thousand adult females here. Other protected and rare species can also be found here including the Nile crocodile, the dwarf crocodile and the bottlenose dolphin.

28–29 MISSISSIPPI DELTA, USA

The United States longest river, the Mississippi, is constantly changing course and the evidence for this can be seen in the meanders and ox-bow lakes. At the moment the river is flowing far to the east, this benfits New Orleans and Baton Rouge as they are port cities, but from the 1950s it became clear that the river was starting to change course to head west again. This would have meant that much of the flow of the Mississippi would have gone into the Atchafalaya river which distributes the waters of the Mississippi. This makes it a distributary of the Mississippi rather than a tributary. Controlling the river to prevent this change has meant that many structures have been put in place, some of which can been seen in this image. For example the Bonnet Carre Spillway is visible in the southwest corner of Lake Pontchartrain. This image shows very clearly not only how low-lying the land is here, but also how the river affects settlement and agriculture. The Bayou Lafourche runs from the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, right between two main roads and it has been referred to as 'the longest main street in the world'. At 171 km (106 miles) long it has been cut off from the river since 1905, however there is a plan to reconnect it to the river with a control in place that will regulate the water discharge. This will help with the problems of land loss and improve water quality.

30–31 TORRES DEL PAINE NATIONAL PARK, CHILE

This summer view of part of the Torres del Paine National Park, is oriented with east at the top of the image and north to the left. It shows the Grey Glacier at the bottom centre, with Lago Nordenskjöld the lighter lake top right. This lake is named after the Swedish geologist, geographer and polar explorer, Otto Nordenskjöld, who discovered it. The waterfall Salto Grande can be seen where the lake flows into the darker blue coloured Lago Pehoé. In the area between the Grey Lake and the Lago Nordenskjöld is the Cordillera del Paine. This is a small group of mountains that includes the well-known Torres del Paine, three granite monoliths that have been shaped by glacial ice. This is a popular area for trekking and camping. The park has been a UNESCO Biosphere Reserve since 1978 and some of the wildlife that can been seen include the guanaco, a close relative of the llama, as well as puma, condor, and the endangered South Andean deer or huemul. It is estimated that there are only about 2000 huemul left. Both the condor and the huemul appear on Chile's National Coat of Arms.

32–33 SOLAR ÉCLIPSE, ARCTIC OCEAN

A total solar eclipse occurs when the Moon completely covers the Sun from the view of observers on Earth. This casts the shadow of the Moon on the Earth's surface. The phenomenon occurs on a regular basis around the world but very infrequently in the same location. A total solar eclipse occurred on 20 March 2015, but very little of the penumbra (shadow) crossed land so most of the totality was over water. NASA's Terra satellite was passing over the Arctic Ocean at the time of the total eclipse and caught this image of the shadow. The islands of Svalbard and Jan Mayen are in the top left of the image with Ostrov Severny in the bottom right, under the penumbra that shows in a golden colour. This image also shows the phenomenon known as cloud streets where clouds can be seen lined up in close parallel rows. Air blowing over cold, snow-covered land and then over ice becomes both cold and dry. When the air then moves over water that is relatively warmer and much moister it leads to the development of parallel cylinders of spinning air. On the top edge of these cylinders where the air is rising, small clouds form. Where air is descending, the skies are clear. This pattern of alternating clear and cloudy, formed in parallel rows, gives an impression of streets.

34–35 MOUNT SIDLEY, ANTARCTICA

While Mount Vinson is well documented as the highest mountain in Antarctica, the highest volcano is less well known due to its remote location. The peak with the shadow over the caldera is Mount Sidley. This volcano is part of a chain of eighteen major volcanoes on the Pacific coast of Antarctica, and makes up one of five peaks in the Executive Committee Range, so named because the range was discovered by a flight from the United States Antarctic Service in December 1940 and is named after the service's Executive Committee. Mount Sidley is not named after an Executive committee member as it was discovered in 1934, but the others in this image are. Below it is Mount Waesche, and to the left are Mount Hartigan and Mount Cumming, with Mount Hampton just out of the frame. The volcano has a summit elevation over 4000 m and the first recorded ascent was not until 1990. The caldera is over 5km wide but the volcano is dormant although this is the youngest volcano in the range. Recent work by seismologists in Antarctica has suggested that a new volcano may be forming under the ice about 30 miles away.

38–39 THE WORLD ON MERCATOR'S PROJECTION 1858

From the Family Atlas of Physical, General and Classical Geography. Drawn and engraved by J. Bartholomew Jr, F.R.G.S.

The nineteenth century was known as the 'Age of Empire', when all the major European powers harboured imperial ambitions and used their commercial and military might to extend their influence. In the first half of the century, the process had been gradual. Britain had emerged as the pre-eminent overseas power, extending the boundaries of her established colonial possessions in North America, India and Australia. In the second half of the century, the pace of imperial expansion increased markedly and the world depicted here was on the cusp of a dramatic change.

40–41 POLITICAL MAP OF THE WORLD 1914

From the International Reference Atlas of the World. Cartography by J. G. Bartholomew, LL.D., F.R.G.S., Cartographer to the King.

This map shows the imperial divisions of the world at the onset of the First World War in 1914. European colonial empires had grown rapidly over the past century and by now the Great Powers of Europe had engrossed nine-tenths of Africa and much of Asia. Prior to 1914, Europe had been run on balance-of-power politics, where a status quo was maintained between the major powers, often with unofficial agreements and alliances.

42–43 WORLD POLITICAL DIVISIONS 1936

From the Advanced Atlas, Fifth Edition. Cartography by John Bartholomew, M.C., M.A., F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., Cartographer to the King.

The political situation of the world three years before the outbreak of the Second World War can be seen from this map. The power of empires had waned significantly after the First World War, and a number of treaties and pacts were signed between countries to safeguard against military attacks. Growing political and social conflict was leading to nationalist uprisings, while both communism and fascism were on the rise in Europe.

44–45 WORLD ROUTES OF COMMERCE 1950

From the Advanced Atlas of Modern Geography. Cartography by John Bartholomew, M.C., Director, the Geographical Institute, Edinburgh.

Just as the First World War had acted as a catalyst for massive change to the existing world order, so too the fallout from the Second World War brought significant political, territorial and economic upheaval across the globe. The most significant development in world politics post-1945 was the emergence of the USA and USSR as hostile superpowers, and the ideological alignment of other nations with each respective camp. The armed stand-off which emerged between the two power blocs became known as the Cold War and lasted until the fall of Soviet communism in the early 1990s.

46–47 WORLD POLITICAL CHART 1963

From the Edinburgh World Atlas, Fifth Edition. Cartography by John Bartholomew, C.B.E., M.C., LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S.

Almost twenty years on from the end of the Second World War, the 'Age of Empire' was close to its end. International politics had instead become dominated b two superpowers – the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) – who were opposed to each other during the lengthy Cold War. Significant changes affected French and British possessions worldwide at this time. After the war, European powers no longer had the military strength to defend against nationalist movements, nor the economic strength to enforce their rule. Decolonisation in Africa increased.

48–49 STATES OF THE WORLD 1982

From the Bartholomew World Atlas, Twelfth Edition. Cartography by John Bartholomew, M.A., F.R.S.E., Director, the Geographical Institute, Edinburgh.

This map represents a transition between one extensi series of changes and another – beforehand, the decolonisation which had gone on, especially in Afric and afterwards, the collapse of communist regimes in the 1990s. One of the inset maps plots the many changes of sovereignty that had occurred since 1939. Britain sought to maintain association with its forme colonies through the Commonwealth. The changes that came after this map was published mostly resulte from political changes in the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies.

–51 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA 1879

is 1879 map of the United States of America depicts e country at a particularly interesting time in its tory. Following the Union victory in the civil war 1865 the southern states were very slow to re-build. e northern states by comparison, driven by an precedented influx of immigrants from Europe, rged ahead with rapid urbanization, infrastructure velopment and economic growth.

ne of the main barriers to westward expansion into lifornia was the Sierra Nevada mountain range. nigrants attempting to cross the range by wagon faced ong and dangerous journey that many did not survive. 1844 a party travelling westward into the mountains lowed the Truckee River. This led them to what is now lled the Donner Pass at 2 160 m (7 085 ft). This low rrow pass became the gateway west into California for ousands of emigrants. A direct rail connection came in 69 with the completion of the First Transcontinental ilroad through the Donner Pass. While the pass is not med on the map, the railroad can be seen crossing the evada/ California state boundary and then the Sierra evada mountains to the northwest of Carson City.

2–53 WEST AFRICA, COLONIAL MAP 1895

nis composite map of colonial West Africa from the end the nineteenth century centres on the coast around quatorial Africa – the Gulf of Guinea to the north d the mouth of the Congo. Holding the coastal land as key to gaining and maintaining territory in Africa: om the coast, materials and supplies could be shipped and out, especially along navigable rivers, allowing rther annexation. All the major European powers are presented in these maps of coastal areas.

ance was the largest power in West Africa. Dahomey as only a small part of their massive swathe of territory at ran from the Mediterranean to the equator. In 1895, e year the map was drawn, the French amalgamated all eir holdings into the Federation of French West Africa, colony that would prove successful for France. The nall coastal wedge marked as Belgian territory belied the assive interior lands of the Congo Free State. Belgian ing Leopold II privately controlled the rich area through corporation but at a heavy price to the local people ecause of the harsh treatment they received.

4–55 SOUTH AMERICA 1895

he South America map of 1895 depicts a continent hose borders are mostly recognisable today. The political rces that shaped national boundaries throughout he nineteenth century were virtually spent. The panish and Portuguese empires had been driven off he continental mainland and in their former colonies ocal establishment alliances ran the new republics. Greater political stability allowed increased economic evelopment and South America became a major exporter f minerals and commodities including beef, coffee, heat, rubber and sugar to the industrialised world.

order changes after 1895 were largely contained to isputed territories between neighbours. The exception as Panama, which appears on the 1895 map as a region f Colombia. Panama declared independence in 1903 with he backing of the USA; in return, the USA agreed to build nd maintain a canal within a predesignated zone across he isthmus. The Panama Canal was completed in 1914.

56–57 AFRICA POLITICAL 1895

From The Times Atlas, First Edition.

The African continent was parcelled up between competing European powers in the late nineteenth century and this map illustrates those divisions. Before then, little of Africa was ruled directly by Europeans, with the exceptions of the British Cape Colony, French Algeria and some smaller coastal footholds. But the work of explorers such as Livingstone, Stanley, Burton and Speke revealed the vast resources that lay in what was then the unknown 'Dark Continent'.

The imperial 'Scramble for Africa' began in the 1880s, fuelled by strategic rivalries, national ambitions and a commercial imperative to find new markets and new materials. Britain was the chief beneficiary, spurred on by the desire to secure communication channels with India, keystone of the empire. For this reason, Egypt was effectively annexed in 1882 to protect the strategically vital Suez Canal; and neighbouring Sudan would be annexed in 1898. But Britain would shortly face its sternest African military test from the Dutch Boers who from 1899–1902 would fight to re-establish the autonomy of their southern African republics.

58–59 NORTH POLAR REGIONS AND SOUTH POLAR REGIONS 1898

From the Citizen's Atlas. Cartography by J. G. Bartholomew, F.R.G.S.

These maps of the polar regions allow a variety of interesting comparisons to be drawn about these extremes of the Earth and how they were being explored. Far from being homogeneous ice masses, the northern and southern polar regions are physically very different. The North Pole is at the centre of the Arctic Ocean and is an almost landlocked body of water largely composed of drifting pack ice; the South Pole, by contrast, lies on a continental land mass.

The motivations of those who ventured into these unexplored regions were different. For many northern polar explorers, the intention was to find a navigable passage through the ice to open up a trade route to link the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans – the so-called Northwest Passage. Unlike the northern polar region, the physical boundaries of the southern polar region were very poorly understood. It was not until the 1820s that Antarctica was first actually sighted, probably by the Russian explorer, Bellingshausen. From the 1830s a series of national expeditions embarked for Antarctica.

60–61 AUSTRALIA 1898

From the Citizen's Atlas. Cartography by J. G. Bartholomew, F.R.G.S.

This map records the geopolitical make-up of Australia immediately prior to the ending of British colonial rule. Three years after it was drawn, the federal Commonwealth of Australia came into being, holding Dominion status under the British Crown. The political boundaries depicted here had been established during the course of the nineteenth century, and with minor exceptions have remained unchanged to the present day. A particularly striking feature of the map is the pattern of settlement. The temperate and subtropical climates of the southwestern and eastern coastal areas attracted the original European settlers and 60 per cent of the Australian population still lives there. The drive inland was accelerated by a series of goldrushes beginning in the 1850s.

62–63 THE FAR EAST 1907

From The Atlas of the World's Commerce, George Newnes. Edited by J. G. Bartholomew, F.R.G.S.

One of the most striking features of this map of the Far East from 1907 is the web of activity around the coasts and inland. Shipping lines, railways and, to a lesser extent, canals and navigable rivers all form a network of connections designed to facilitate movement. Lines of communication, notably undersea cables and consular offices, back up the mass of transport links, all together painting a picture of a mercantile system whose very density portrays a vibrant energy.

By the early twentieth century, trade and economic activity spanned the globe, connecting people on opposite sides of the world. A nation's trade was not just with its neighbours a packhorse ride away, but was across seas and international boundaries. The industrialized nations opened up new markets in the Far East, buying raw materials and foods for manufacture, driving new industries and inventions and benefitting buyers and sellers alike.

64–65 TURKEY IN ASIA, PERSIA, ARABIA, &c. 1914

From the International Reference Atlas of the World. Cartography by J. G. Bartholomew, LL.D., F.R.G.S., Cartographer to the King.

The late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries had seen a dramatic contraction of the Ottoman Empire, particularly in the Balkans but also in North Africa, where Algeria and Tunisia had been ceded to France, and Libya to Italy. Although never formally invaded, Persia was economically dependent on Europe, and as a result, Britain and Russia effectively divided the country between them from 1907 into two spheres of economic interest in which each power could exert its influence.

In October 1914, Turkey entered the First World War on Germany's side, starting the train of events that would bring about the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire and the creation of the modern Turkish republic.

66–67 EUROPE POLITICAL 1922

From The Times Survey Atlas of the World, Prepared at "The Edinburgh Geographical Institute" under the direction of J. G. Bartholomew, LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.R.G.S., Cartographer to the King.

The aftermath of the First World War and the Treaty of Versailles in 1919 redrew the world map and brought an end to the centuries of dynastic power in central and eastern Europe. The new separate states of Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia emerged after the demise of the Habsburg dynasty. At this time, ethnic nationalism was threatening European colonial empires with ideas of democracy and social reform.

Following the Russian Revolution in 1917, the Russian Empire lost much of its western frontier – the new Baltic states of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania successfully fought independence and were recognised as independent countries in 1920. The map, however, shows these states during only a brief spell of independence.

68–69 WORLD POWERS 1957

From The Times Atlas of the World, Mid-Century Edition 1958. Cartography by John Bartholomew, M.C., LL.D.

The most striking feature of this map is its unusual viewpoint (or projection). Devised in 1948 by John Bartholomew, the Atlantis Projection abandons the common atlas convention of showing the Arctic at the top and the Antarctic at the bottom. Here the projection is tilted to focus on the Atlantic Ocean. In this instance it is particularly effective in conveying the combative nature of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, the two 'superpowers' which emerged to dominate the new world order following the Second World War.

Within a few short years of this particular map being drawn, significant colour changes would be required for a number of countries: Alaska would become a full member state of the USA (1959); Fidel Castro would establish a Marxist government in Cuba (1959), and the process by which many African nations would shake off the remnants of European colonialism would begin in earnest.

STATES AND TERRITORIES

All 196 independent countries and all populated dependent and disputed territories are included in this list of the states and territories of the world; the list is arranged in alphabetical order by the conventional name form. For independent states, the full name is given below the conventional name, if this is different; for territories, the status is given. The capital city name is given in conventional English form with selected alternative, usually local, form in brackets.

Area and population statistics are the latest available and include estimates. The information on languages and religions is based on the latest information on 'de facto' speakers of the language or 'de facto' adherents of the religion. This varies greatly from country to country because some countries include questions in censuses while others do not, in which case best estimates are used. The order of the languages and religions reflects their relative importance within the country; generally, languages or religions are included when more than one per cent of the population are estimated to be speakers or adherents.

Area Sq Miles	3 359	Religions	Abkhaz Orthodox Christianity, Sunni Muslim
Population	180 000	Currency	Russian rouble, Abkhaz apsar
Capital	Sokhumi (Aq''a)

Map page 173 An autonomous republic within Georgia, Abkhazia has an active separatist movement seeking independence from Georgia. Although it is de jure part of Georgia, it effectively currently functions as an independent state with backing from Russia. This dispute has led to intermittent, but serious, armed conflict over the last twenty years. Abkhazia voted to separate from Georgia in 1992, a move rejected by Georgia and prompting a Georgian invasion. Abkhazian and Russian forces ousted Georgia and a cease-fire was established in 1994.

Area Sq Miles	80 155	Religions	Belarusian Orthodox, Roman Catholic
Population	9 357 000	Currency	Belarusian rouble
Capital	Minsk	Organizations	CIS, UN

Belarus, a landlocked state in eastern Europe, consists of low hills and plains, with many lakes, rivers and, in the south, extensive marshes. Forests cover approximately one-third of the country. It has a continental climate. Agriculture contributes one-third of national income, with beef cattle and grains as the major products. Manufacturing industries produce a range of items, from construction equipment to textiles. Russia and Ukraine are the main trading partners.

BELGIUM

Kingdom of Belgium

Area Sq Km	30 520	Languages	Dutch (Flemish), French (Walloon), German
Area Sq Miles	11 784	Religions	Roman Catholic, Protestant
Population	11 104 000	Currency	Euro
Capital	Brussels (Brussel/Bruxelles)	Organizations	EU, NATO, OECD, UN

Belgium lies on the North Sea coast of western Europe. Beyond low sand dunes and a narrow belt of reclaimed land, fertile plains extend to the Sambre-Meuse river valley. The land rises to the forested Ardennes plateau in the southeast. Belgium has mild winters and cool summers. It is densely populated and has a highly urbanized population. With few mineral resources, Belgium imports raw materials for processing and manufacture. The agricultural sector is small, but provides for most food needs. A large services sector reflects Belgium's position as the home base for over eight hundred international institutions. The headquarters of the European Union are in the capital, Brussels.

BELIZE

Area Sq Km	22 965	Languages	English, Spanish, Mayan, Creole
Area Sq Miles	8 867	Religions	Roman Catholic, Protestant
Population	332 000	Currency	Belizean dollar
Capital	Belmopan	Organizations	CARICOM, Comm., UN

Belize lies on the Caribbean coast of central America and includes numerous cays and a large barrier reef offshore. The coastal areas are flat and swampy. To the southwest are the Maya Mountains. Tropical jungle covers much of the country and the climate is humid tropical, but tempered by sea breezes. A fifth of the population lives in the former capital Belize City. The economy is based primarily on agriculture, forestry and fishing, and exports include raw sugar, orange concentrate and bananas.

Brazil, in eastern South America, covers almost half of the continent, and is the world's fifth largest country. The northwest contains the vast basin of the Amazon, while the centre-west is largely a vast plateau of savanna and rock escarpments. The northeast is mostly semi-arid plateaus, while to the east and south are rugged mountains, fertile valleys and narrow, fertile coastal plains. The Amazon basin is hot, humid and wet; the rest of the country is cooler and drier, with seasonal variations. The northeast is drought-prone. Most Brazilians live in urban areas along the coast and on the central plateau. Brazil has well-developed agricultural, mining and service sectors, and the economy is larger than that of all other South American countries combined. Brazil is the world's biggest producer of coffee, and other agricultural crops include grains and sugar cane. Mineral production includes iron, aluminium and gold. Manufactured goods include food products, transport equipment, machinery and industrial chemicals. The main trading partners are the USA, China and Argentina. Economic reforms in Brazil have turned it into one of the fastest growing economies.

The world's second largest country, Canada covers the northern two-fifths of North America and has coastlines on the Atlantic, Arctic and Pacific Oceans. In the west are the Coast Mountains, the Rocky Mountains and interio plateaus. In the centre lie the fertile Prairies. Further east, covering about half the total land area, is the Canadian Shield, a relatively flat area of infertile lowlands around Hudson Bay, extending to Labrador on the east coast. The Shield is bordered to the south by the fertile Great Lakes-St Lawrence lowlands. In the far north climatic conditions are polar, while the rest has a continental climate. Most Canadians live in the urban areas of the Great Lakes-St Lawrence basin. Canada is rich in mineral and energy resources. Only five per cent of land is arable. Canada is among the world's leading producers of wheat, of wood from its vast coniferous forests, and of fish and seafood from its Atlantic and Pacific fishing grounds. It is a major producer of nickel, uranium, copper, iron ore, zinc and other minerals, as well as oil and natural gas. Its abundan raw materials are the basis for many manufacturing industries. Main exports are machinery, motor vehicles, o timber, newsprint and paper, wood pulp and wheat. Since the 1989 free trade agreement with the USA and the 1994 North America Free Trade Agreement, trade with the USA has grown and now accounts for around fifty per cent of imports and around seventy-five per cent of exports.

China, the world's most populous and fourth largest country, occupies a large part of east Asia, borders fourteen states and has coastlines on the Yellow, East China and South China Seas. It has a huge variety of landscapes. The southwest contains the high ateau of Tibet, flanked by the Himalaya and Kunlun Shan ountains. The north is mountainous with arid basins and tends from the Tien Shan and Altai Mountains and the vast klimakan Desert in the west to the plateau and Gobi Desert the centre-east. Eastern China is predominantly lowland and divided broadly into the basins of the Yellow River (Huang e) in the north, the Yangtze (Chang Jiang) in the centre and e Pearl River (Xi Jiang) in the southeast. Climatic conditions d vegetation are as diverse as the topography: much of the untry experiences temperate conditions, while the southwest has an extreme mountain climate and the southeast enjoys a moist, warm subtropical climate. Just under fifty per cent of China's huge population lives in rural areas, and agriculture employs over thirty-five per cent of the working population. The main crops are rice, wheat, soya beans, peanuts, cotton, tobacco and hemp. China is rich in coal, oil and natural gas and has the world's largest potential in hydroelectric power. It is a major world producer of iron ore, molybdenum, copper, asbestos and gold. Economic reforms from the early 1980s led to an explosion in manufacturing development concentrated on the 'coastal economic open region'. The main exports are machinery, textiles, footwear, toys and sports goods. Japan and the USA are China's main trading partners.

A state in northwest South America, Colombia has coastlines on the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean Sea. Behind coastal plains lie three ranges of the Andes mountains, separated by high valleys and plateaus where most Colombians live. To the southeast are grasslands and the forests of the Amazon. The climate is tropical, although temperatures vary with altitude. Only five per cent of land is cultivable. Coffee (Colombia is the world's third largest producer), sugar, bananas, cotton and flowers are exported. Coal, nickel, gold, silver, platinum and high-quality emeralds are mined. Oil and its products are the main export. Industries include the processing of minerals and crops. The main trade partner is the USA. Internal violence – both politically motivated and relating to Colombia's leading role in the international trade in illegal drugs – continues to hinder development.

The south Asian country of India occupies a peninsula that juts out into the Indian Ocean between the Arabian Sea and Bay of Bengal. The heart of the peninsula is the Deccan plateau, bordered on either side by ranges of hills, the western Ghats and the lower eastern Ghats, which fall away to narrow coastal plains. To the north is a broad plain, drained by the Indus, Ganges and Brahmaputra rivers and their tributaries. The plain is intensively farmed and is the most populous region. In the west is the Thar Desert. The mountains of the Himalaya form India's northern border, together with parts of the Karakoram and Hindu Kush ranges in the northwest. The climate shows marked seasonal variation: a hot season from March to June; a monsoon season from June to October; and a cold season from November to February. Rainfall ranges between very high in the northeast Assam region to negligible in the Thar Desert. Temperatures range from very cold in the Himalaya to tropical heat over much of the south. Over sixty-seven per cent of the huge population – the second largest in the world – is rural, although Delhi, Mumbai (Bombay) and Kolkata (Calcutta) all rank among the ten largest cities in the world. Agriculture, forestry and fishing account for a quarter of national output and two-thirds of employment. Much of the farming is on a subsistence basis and involves mainly rice and wheat. India is a major world producer of tea, sugar, jute, cotton and tobacco. Livestock is reared mainly for dairy products and hides. There are major reserves of coal, reserves of oil and natural gas, and many minerals, including iron, manganese, bauxite, diamonds and gold. The manufacturing sector is large and diverse – mainly chemicals and chemical products, textiles, iron and steel, food products, electrical goods and transport equipment; software and pharmaceuticals are also important. All the main manufactured products are exported, together with diamonds and jewellery. The USA, Germany, Japan and the UK are the main trading partners.

Iran is in southwest Asia, and has coasts on The Gulf, the Caspian Sea and the Gulf of Oman. In the east is a high plateau, with large salt pans and a vast sand desert. In the west the Zagros Mountains form a series of ridges, and to the north lie the Elburz Mountains. Most farming and settlement is on the narrow plain along the Caspian Sea and in the foothills of the north and west. The climate is one of extremes, with hot summers and very cold winters. Most of the light rainfall is in the winter months. Agriculture involves approximately one-fifth of the workforce. Wheat is the main crop, but fruit (especially dates) and pistachio nuts are grown for export. Petroleum (the main export) and natural gas are Iran's leading natural resources. Manufactured goods include carpets, clothing, food products and construction materials.

Iraq, in southwest Asia, has at its heart the lowland valley of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. In the southeast, where the two rivers join, are the Mesopotamian marshes and the Shaṭṭ al 'Arab waterway leading to The Gulf. The north is hilly, while the west is mostly desert. Summers are hot and dry, and winters are mild with light, unreliable rainfall. The Tigris-Euphrates valley contains most of the country's arable land. One in five of the population lives in the capital, Baghdad. The economy has suffered following the 1991 Gulf War and the invasion of US-led coalition forces in 2005. The latter resulted in the overthrow of the dictator Saddam Hussein, but there is continuing internal instability. Oil is normally the main export.

The Irish Republic occupies some eighty per cent of the island of Ireland, in northwest Europe. It is a lowland country of wide valleys, lakes and peat bogs, with isolated mountain ranges around the coast. The west coast is rugged and indented with many bays. The climate is mild due to the modifying effect of the North Atlantic Drift ocean current and rainfall is plentiful, although highest in the west. Over sixty per cent of the population lives in urban areas, Dublin and Cork being the main cities. Resources include natural gas, peat, lead and zinc. Agriculture, the traditional mainstay, now employs less than six per cent of the workforce, while industry employs nearly thirty per cent. The main industries are electronics, pharmaceuticals and engineering as well as food processing, brewing and textiles. Service industries are expanding, with tourism a major earner. The UK and USA are the main trading partners.

Most of the southern European state of Italy occupies a peninsula that juts out into the Mediterranean Sea. It includes the islands of Sicily and Sardinia and approximately seventy much smaller islands in the surrounding seas. Italy is mountainous, dominated by the Alps, which form its northern border, and the various ranges of the Apennines, which run almost the full length of the peninsula. Many of Italy's mountains are of volcanic origin, and its active volcanoes are Vesuvius, near Naples, Etna and Stromboli. The main lowland area, the Po river valley in the northeast, is the main agricultural and industrial area and is the most populous region. Italy has a Mediterranean climate, although the north experiences colder, wetter winters, with heavy snow in the Alps. The economy is fairly diversified. Some oil, natural gas and coal are produced, but most fuels and minerals used by industry are imported. Agriculture is important, with about a third of the land under cultivation and cereals, vines, fruit and vegetables are the main crops. Italy is the world's second largest wine producer. The north is the centre of Italian industry, especially around Turin, Milan and Genoa. Leading manufactures include industrial and office equipment, domestic appliances, cars, textiles, clothing, leather goods, chemicals and metal products. There is a strong service sector, and with over forty-six million visitors a year, tourism is a major employer and accounts for ten per cent of the national income. Finance and banking are also important. Most trade is with other European Union countries.

Japan lies in the Pacific Ocean off the coast of eastern Asia and consists of four main islands – Hokkaidō, Honshū, Shikoku and Kyūshū – and more than three thousand smaller islands in the surrounding Sea of Japan, East China Sea and Pacific Ocean. The central island of Honshū accounts for sixty per cent of the total land area and contains eighty per cent of the population. Behind the long and deeply indented coastline, nearly three-quarters of the country is mountainous and heavily forested. Japan has over sixty active volcanoes, and is subject to frequent earthquakes and typhoons. The climate is generally temperate maritime, with warm summers and mild winters, except in western Hokkaidō and northwest Honshū, where the winters are very cold with heavy snow. Only fourteen per cent of the land area is suitable for cultivation, and its few raw materials (coal, oil, natural gas, lead, zinc and copper) are insufficient for its industry. Most materials must be imported, including about ninety per cent of energy requirements. Yet Japan has the world's second largest industrial economy, with a range of modern heavy and light industries centred mainly around the major ports of Yokohama, Ōsaka and Tōkyō. It is the world's largest manufacturer of cars, motorcycles and merchant ships, and a major producer of steel, textiles, chemicals and cement. It is also a leading producer of many consumer durables, such as washing machines, and electronic equipment, chiefly office equipment and computers. Japan has a strong service sector, banking and finance being particularly important, ar Tōkyō has one of the world's major stock exchanges. Owing to intensive agricultural production, Japan is seventy per cer self-sufficient in food. The main food crops are rice, barley, fruit, wheat and soya beans. Livestock rearing (chiefly cattle, pigs and chickens) and fishing are also important, and Japar has one of the largest fishing fleets in the world. A major trading nation, Japan has trade links with many countries in southeast Asia and in Europe, although its main trading partner is the USA.

Libya lies on the Mediterranean coast of north Africa. The desert plains and hills of the Sahara dominate the landscape and the climate is hot and dry. Most of the population lives in cities near the coast, where the climate is cooler with moderate rainfall. Farming and herding, chiefly in the northwest, are important but the main industry is oil. Libya is a major producer, and oil accounts for most of its export earnings. Italy and Germany are the main trading partners. As a result of the civil war in 2011 oil exports were disrupted and there was severe damage to the infrastructure of the country.

It is legally part of Azerbaijan, but is populated largely by ethnic Armenians who have established what amounts to a separatist de facto republic operating with support from Armenia. In 1991, the local Armenian population declared independence and Azerbaijan abolished the area's autonomous status. As a result of conflict, Nagorno-Karabakh/Armenia occupies approximately twenty per cent of Azerbaijan. A Russian-brokered cease-fire has been in place since 1994, with the cease-fire line enclosing the territory of Nagorno-Karabakh and the additional parts of Azerbaijan, up to the Armenian border, seized by Karabakh Armenians during the fighting. The area between the cease-fire line and the boundary of Nagorno-Karabakh is effectively a 'no-go' area.

The Netherlands lies on the North Sea coast of western Europe. Apart from low hills in the far southeast, the land is flat and low-lying, much of it below sea level. The coastal region includes the delta of five rivers and polders (reclaimed land), protected by sand dunes, dykes and canals. The climate is temperate, with cool summers and mild winters. Rainfall is spread evenly throughout the year. The Netherlands is a densely populated and highly urbanized country, with the majority of the population living in the cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague. Horticulture and dairy farming are important activities, although they employ less than three per cent of the workforce. The Netherlands ranks as the world's third agricultural exporter, and is a leading producer and exporter of natural gas from reserves in the North Sea. The economy is based mainly on international trade and manufacturing industry. The main industries produce food products, chemicals, machinery, electrical and electronic goods and transport equipment. Germany is the main trading partner, followed by other European Union countries.

New Zealand comprises two main islands separated by the narrow Cook Strait, and a number of smaller islands. North Island, where three-quarters of the population lives, has mountain ranges, broad fertile valleys and a central plateau with hot springs and active volcanoes. South Island is also mountainous, with the Southern Alps running its entire length. The only major lowland area is the Canterbury Plains in the centre-east. The climate is generally temperate, although South Island has colder winters. Farming is the mainstay of the economy. New Zealand is one of the world's leading producers of meat (beef, lamb and mutton), wool and dairy products; fruit and fish are also important. Hydroelectric and geothermal power provide much of the country's energy needs. Other industries produce timber, wood pulp, iron, aluminium, machinery and chemicals. Tourism is the fastest growing sector of the economy. The main trading partners are Australia, the USA, China, the UK and Japan.

Nigeria is in west Africa, on the Gulf of Guinea, and is the most populous country in Africa. The Niger delta dominates coastal areas, fringed with sandy beaches, mangrove swamps and lagoons. Inland is a belt of rainforest which gives way to woodland or savanna on high plateaus. The far north is the semi-desert edge of the Sahara. The climate is tropical, with heavy summer rainfall in the south but low rainfall in the north. Most of the population lives in the coastal lowlands or in the west. About half the workforce is involved in agriculture, mainly growing subsistence crops. Agricultural production, however, has failed to keep up with demand, and Nigeria is now a net importer of food. Cocoa and rubber are the only significant export crops. The economy is heavily dependent on vast oil resources in the Niger delta and in shallow offshore waters, and oil accounts for over ninety per cent of export earnings. Nigeria also has natural gas reserves and some mineral deposits, but these are largely undeveloped. Industry involves mainly oil refining, chemicals (chiefly fertilizers), agricultural processing, textiles, steel manufacture and vehicle assembly. Political instability in the past has left Nigeria with heavy debts, poverty and unemployment but it is now the largest economy in Africa.

Russia occupies much of eastern Europe and all of northern Asia, and is the world's largest country. It borders fourteen countries to the west and south and has long coastlines on the Arctic and Pacific Oceans to the north and east. European Russia lies west of the Ural Mountains. To the south the land rises to uplands and the Caucasus mountains on the border with Georgia and Azerbaijan. East of the Urals lies the flat West Siberian Plain and the Central Siberian Plateau. In the south-east is Lake Baikal, the world's deepest lake, and the Sayan ranges on the border with Kazakhstan and Mongolia. Eastern Siberia is rugged and mountainous, with many active volcanoes in the Kamchatka Peninsula. The country's major rivers are the Volga in the west and the Ob', Irtysh, Yenisey, Lena and Amur in Siberia. The climate and vegetation range between arctic tundra in the north and semi-arid steppe towards the Black and Caspian Sea coasts in the south. In general, the climate is continental with extreme temperatures. The majority of the population (the tenth largest in the world), and industry and agriculture are concentrated in European Russia. The economy is dependent on exploitation of raw materials and on heavy industry. Russia has a wealth of mineral resources, although they are often difficult to exploit because of climate and remote locations. It is one of the world's leading producers of petroleum, natural gas and coal as well as iron ore, nickel, copper, bauxite, and many precious and rare metals. Forests cover over forty per cent of the land area and supply an important timber, paper and pulp industry. Approximately eight per cent of the land is suitable for cultivation. Agriculture has shown steady growth since 1999, with grain now exported. Fishing is important and Russia has a large fleet operating around the world. The transition to a market economy has been slow and difficult, with considerable underemployment. As well as mining and extractive industries there is a wide range of manufacturing industry, from steel mills to aircraft and space vehicles, shipbuilding, synthetic fabrics, plastics, cotton fabrics, consumer durables, chemicals and fertilizers. Exports include fuels, metals, machinery, chemicals and forest products. The most important trading partners include Germany, the USA and Belarus.

Somalia is in northeast Africa, on the Gulf of Aden and Indian Ocean. It consists of a dry scrubby plateau, rising to highlands in the north. The climate is hot and dry, but coastal areas and the Jubba and Wabē Shebelē Wenz river valleys support crops and most of the population. Subsistence farming and livestock rearing are the main activities. Exports include livestock and bananas. Frequent drought and civil war have prevented economic development. Somalia is one of the poorest, most unstable and least developed countries in the world.

Capital	Hargeysa

Map page 178 After the collapse of the central Somali government in 1991 and at the start of the civil war, Somaliland, in the northwest of the country, covering the area of the former British Protectorate of Somaliland, declared its independence from Somalia as the Republic of Somaliland. A referendum in 2001 saw a majority vote for secession, and Somaliland currently operates as a de facto independent country, with fairly close relations with Ethiopia. The Transitional Federal Government of Somalia does not recognize its independence and conflicts still arise between Somaliland and the neighbouring region of Puntland over ownership of the administrative regions of Sanaag and Sool.

South Africa occupies most of the southern part of Africa. It surrounds Lesotho and has a long coastline on the Atlantic and Indian Oceans. Much of the land is a vast plateau, covered with grassland or bush and drained by the Orange and Limpopo river systems. A fertile coastal plain rises to mountain ridges in the south and east, including Table Mountain near Cape Town and the Drakensberg range in the east. South Africa has warm summers and mild winters. Most of the country has the majority of its rainfall in summer, but the coast around Cape Town has winter rains. South Africa has the largest economy in Africa, although wealth is unevenly distributed and unemployment is very high. Agriculture employs about six per cent of the workforce, and produce includes fruit, wine, wool and maize. The country is the world's leading producer of gold and chromium and an important producer of diamonds. Many other minerals are also mined. The main industries are mineral and food processing, chemicals, electrical equipment, textiles and motor vehicles. Financial services are also important.

The state consists of the southern half of the Korean Peninsula in eastern Asia and many islands lying off the western and southern coasts in the Yellow Sea. The terrain is mountainous, although less rugged than that of North Korea. Population density is high and the country is highly urbanized; most of the population lives on the western coastal plains and in the river basins of the Han-gang in the northwest and the Naktong-gang in the southeast. The climate is continental, with hot, wet summers and dry, cold winters. Arable land is limited by the mountainous terrain, but because of intensive farming South Korea is nearly self-sufficient in food. Sericulture (silk) is important, as is fishing, which contributes to exports. South Korea has few mineral resources, except for coal and tungsten. It has achieved high economic growth based mainly on export manufacturing. The main manufactured goods are cars, electronic and electrical goods, ships, steel, chemicals and toys, as well as textiles, clothing, footwear and food products. The USA, China and Japan are the main trading partners.

Map page 173 The formerly autonomous region of South Ossetia seeks independence from Georgia and looks to Russia, which recognizes its independence, as its principal ally. South Ossetia's autonomous status was removed in 1990. Violent conflicts followed between Georgia and the separatists, supported by Russia, who wished to unite with Russian North Ossetia. A cease-fire was agreed in 1992. Elections in 1996 were not recognized by Georgia, nor were elections and an independence referendum, voting in favour of independence, in 2006. Russian interference and interest in the area has continued to cause tensions with the Georgian government, the most recent conflict was in 2008 when Georgian troops attacked separatists. Russia responded and a week of fighting was ended by a cease-fire and resulted in Russia recognising South Ossetia's independence.

The United Kingdom, in northwest Europe, occupies the island of Great Britain, part of Ireland, and many small adjacent islands. Great Britain comprises England, Scotland and Wales. England covers over half the land area and supports over four-fifths of the population, at its densest in the southeast. The English landscape is flat or rolling with some uplands, notably the Cheviot Hills on the Scottish border, the Pennines in the centre-north, and the hills of the Lake District in the northwest. Scotland consists of southern uplands, central lowlands, the Highlands (which include the UK's highest peak) and many islands. Wales is a land of hills, mountains and river valleys. Northern Ireland contains uplands, plains and the UK's largest lake, Lough Neagh. The climate of the UK is mild, wet and variable. There are few mineral deposits, but important energy resources. Agricultural activities involve sheep and cattle rearing, dairy farming, and crop and fruit growing in the east and southeast. Productivity is high, but approximately one-third of food is imported. The UK produces petroleum and natural gas from reserves in the North Sea and is self-sufficient in energy in net terms. Major manufactures are food and drinks, motor vehicles and parts, aerospace equipment, machinery, electronic and electrical equipment, and chemicals and chemical products. However, the economy is dominated by service industries, including banking, insurance, finance and business services. London, the capital, is one of the world's major financial centres. Tourism is also a major industry, with approximately thirty-two million visitors a year. International trade is also important, equivalent to one-third of national income. Main trading partners are the USA and other European Union countries.

The USA comprises forty-eight contiguous states in North America, bounded by Canada and Mexico, plus the states of Alaska, to the northwest of Canada, and Hawaii, in the north Pacific Ocean. The populous eastern states cover the Atlantic coastal plain (which includes the Florida peninsula and the Gulf of Mexico coast) and the Appalachian Mountains. The central states occupy a vast interior plain drained by the Mississippi-Missouri river system. To the west lie the Rocky Mountains, separated from the Pacific coastal ranges by intermontane plateaus. The Pacific coastal zone is also mountainous, and prone to earthquakes. Hawaii is a group of some twenty volcanic islands. Climatic conditions range between arctic in Alaska to desert in the intermontane plateaus. Most of the USA has a temperate climate, although the interior has continental conditions. There are abundant natural resources, including major reserves of minerals and energy resources. The USA has the largest and most technologically advanced economy in the world, based on manufacturing and services. Although agriculture accounts for approximately two per cent of national income, productivity is high and the USA is a net exporter of food, chiefly grains and fruit. Cotton is the major industrial crop. The USA produces iron ore, copper, lead, zinc, and many other minerals. It is a major producer of coal, petroleum and natural gas, although being the world's biggest energy user it imports significant quantities of petroleum and its products. Manufacturing is diverse. The main industries are petroleum, steel, motor vehicles, aerospace, telecommunications, electronics, food processing, chemicals and consumer goods. Tourism is a major foreign currency earner, with approximately seventy-four million visitors a year. Other important service industries are banking and finance, Wall Street in New York being one of the world's major stock exchanges. Canada and Mexico are the main trading partners.

On 25 April 2015, Nepal suffered an eathquake of magnitude 7.8 killing over 8 000 people and injuring many thousands more. In Bhaktapur, near Kathmandu, this image was taken on 9 May, as local residents clear some of the rubble and look for belongings they can salvage.

RICHTER SCALE

The scale measures the energy released by an earthquake. The scale is logarithmic – a quake measuring 4 is 30 times more powerful than one measuring 3, and a quake measuring 6 is 27 000 times more powerful than one measuring 3.

Tropical Cyclone Pam, seen here in a close view crossing Vanuatu on 13 March 2015, was a Category 5 severe tropical cyclone which reached wind speeds of 155 mph (250 km). Shortly after this image was taken by the NASA Aqua satellite, the cyclone hit the island of Éfaté. For a wider view of cyclone activity at this time, see pages 20–21.

LIMATE GRAPHS

ese graphs relate by number, name and colour to the selected stations on the map and present mean temperature and cipitation values for each month. Red bars show average daily maximum and minimum temperatures for each month in grees centigrade and fahrenheit. Vertical blue columns depict precipitation in millimetres and inches, with the total mean nual precipitation shown under the graph. The altitude of each station above sea level is given in metres and feet.

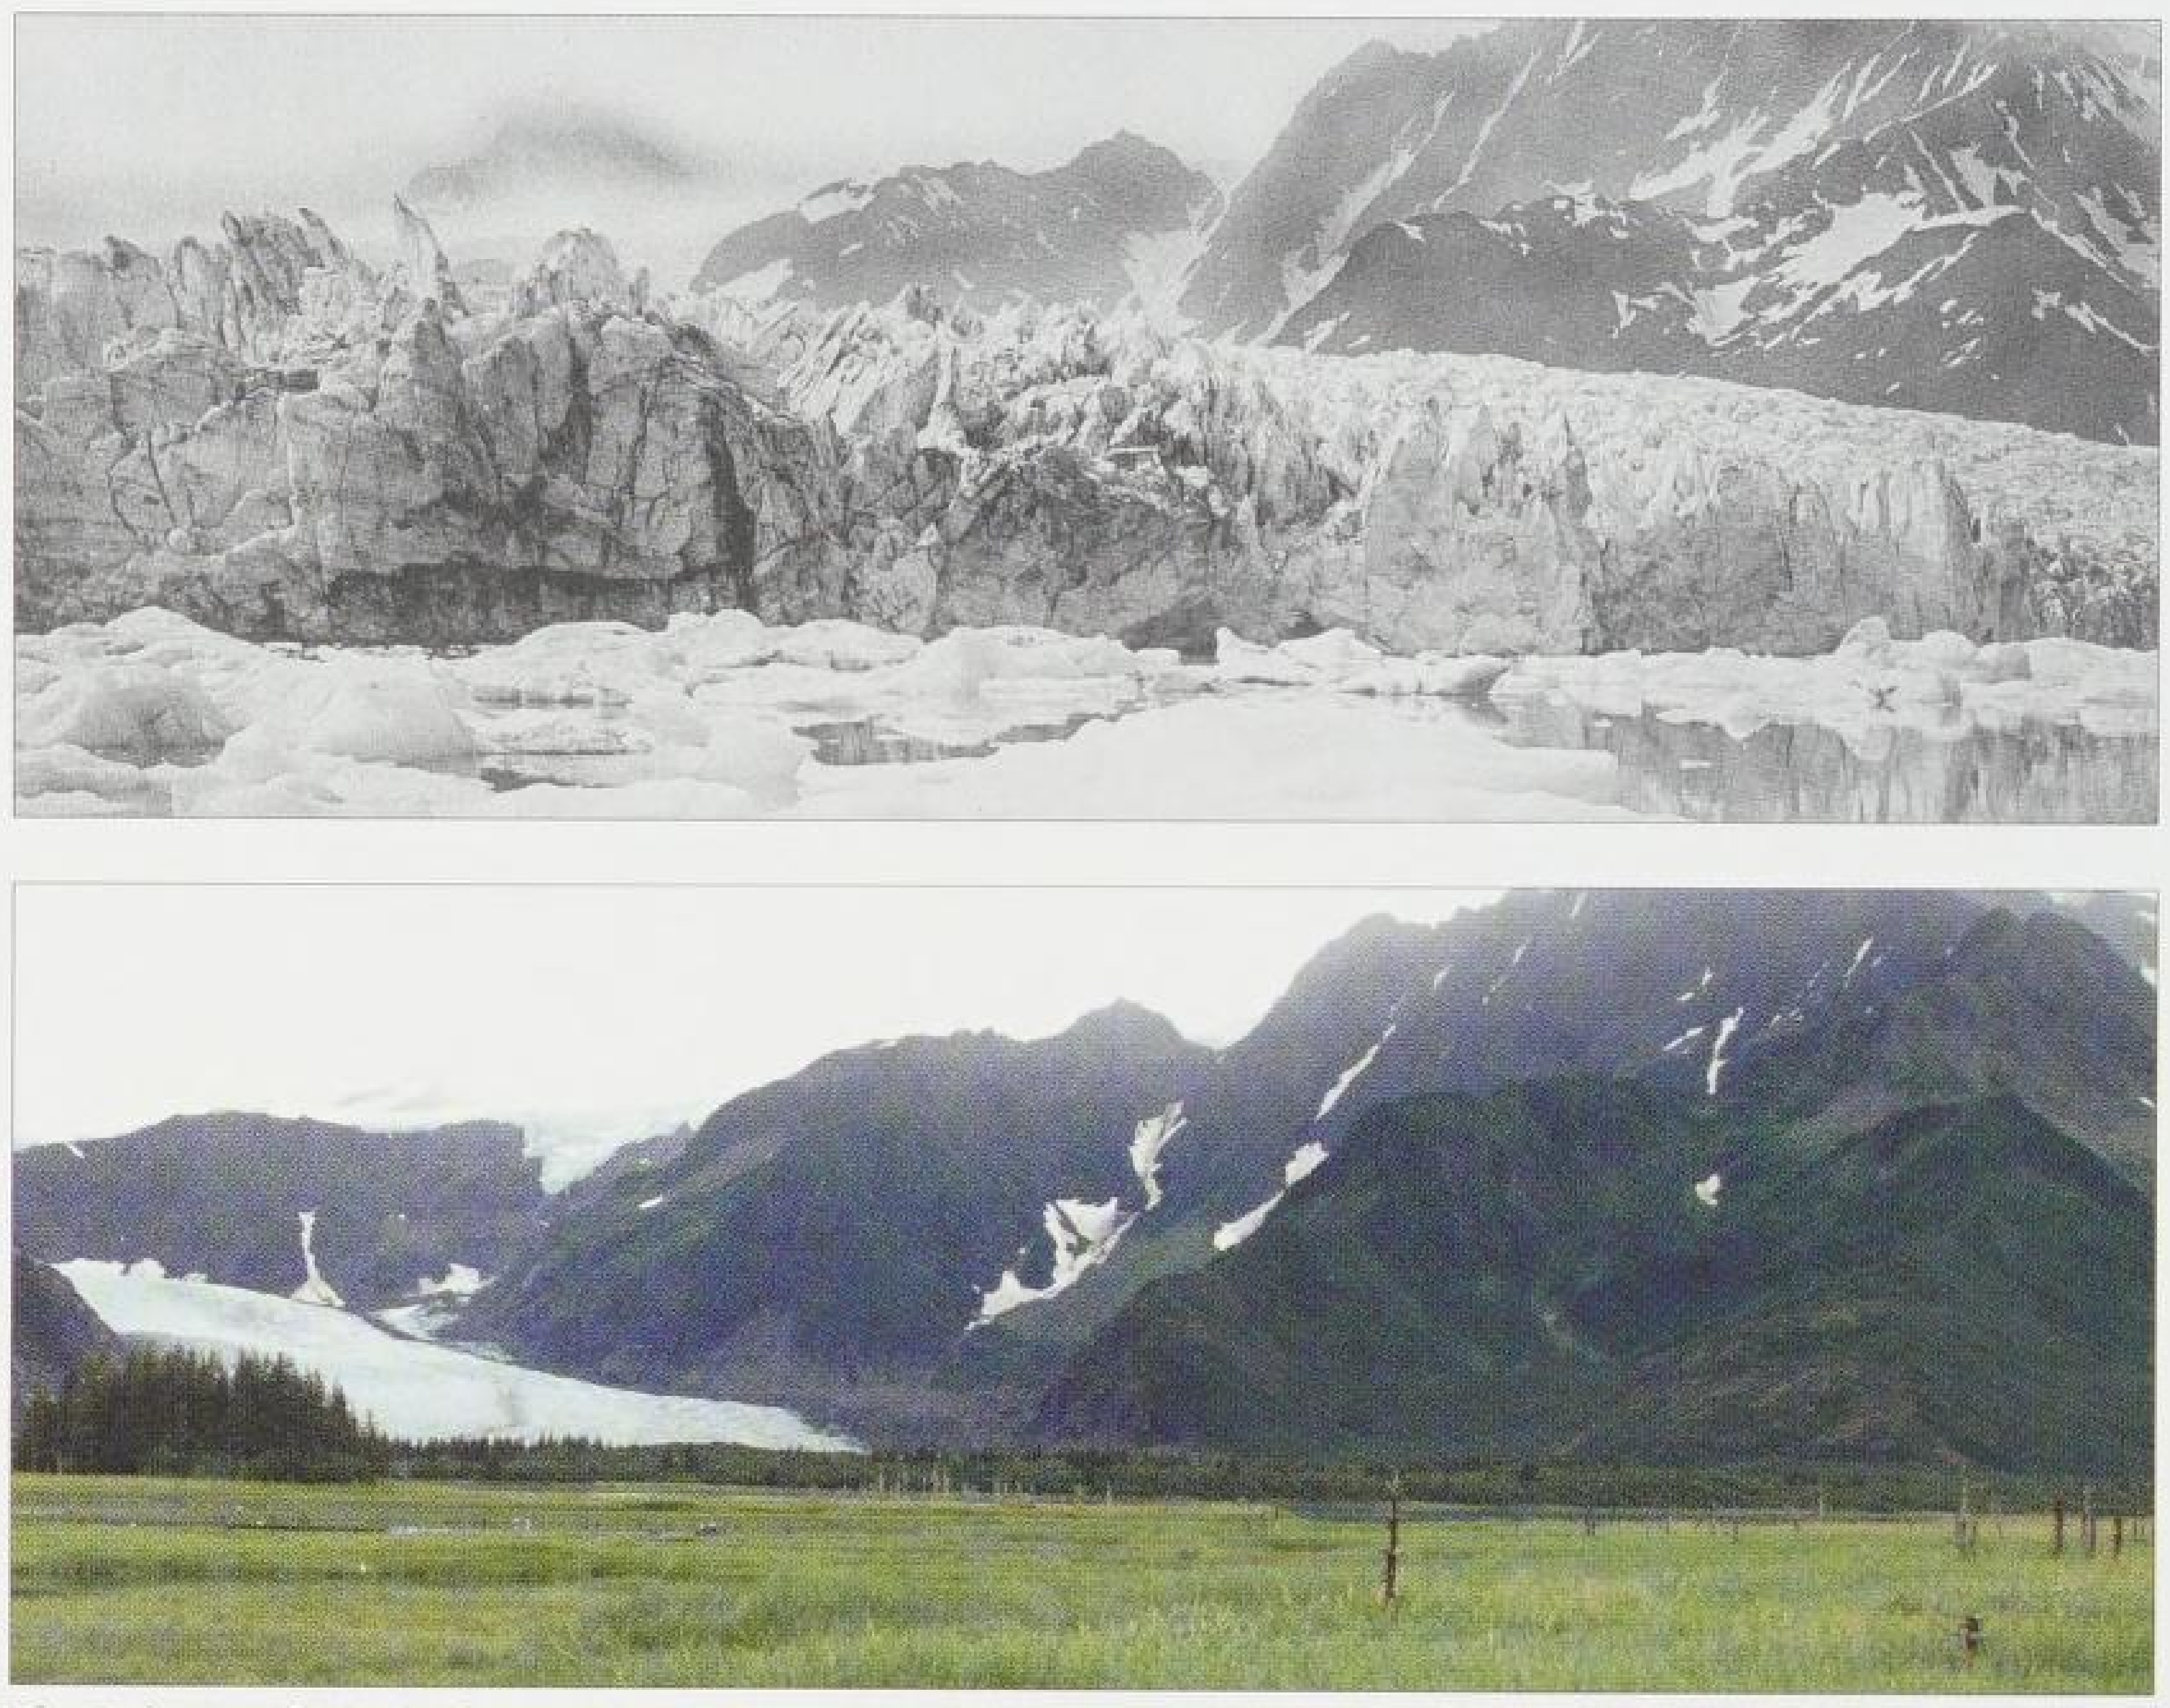
CLIMATE II

CLIMATE CHANGE

Climate records show that the global average temperature has risen by approximately 0.7°C since the end of the nineteenth century. Most of this warming is caused by human activities which result in a build-up of greenhouse gases, mainly carbon dioxide, allowing heat to be trapped within the atmosphere. Carbon dioxide emissions have increased since the beginning of the industrial revolution due to burning of fossil fuels, increased urbanization, population growth, deforestation and industrial pollution.

Annual climate indicators such as number of frost-free days, length of growing season, heat wave frequency, number of wet days, length of dry spells and frequency of weather extremes are used to monitor climate change. The map below shows how future changes in temperature will not be spread evenly around the world. Some regions will warm faster than the global average, while others will warm more slowly.



The Pedersen Glacier in the Kenai Mountains, Alaska. The terminus has retreated by more than 2 km between 1917 (top) and 2005 (bottom).

THREAT OF RISING SEA LEVEL

It has been suggested that further global warming of between 1.0 and 6.4 C° may occur by the end of the 21st century. Sea level is projected to rise by between 28 cm and 58 cm, threatening a number of coastal cities, low-lying deltas and small islands. Larger rises are predicted in some locations than others.

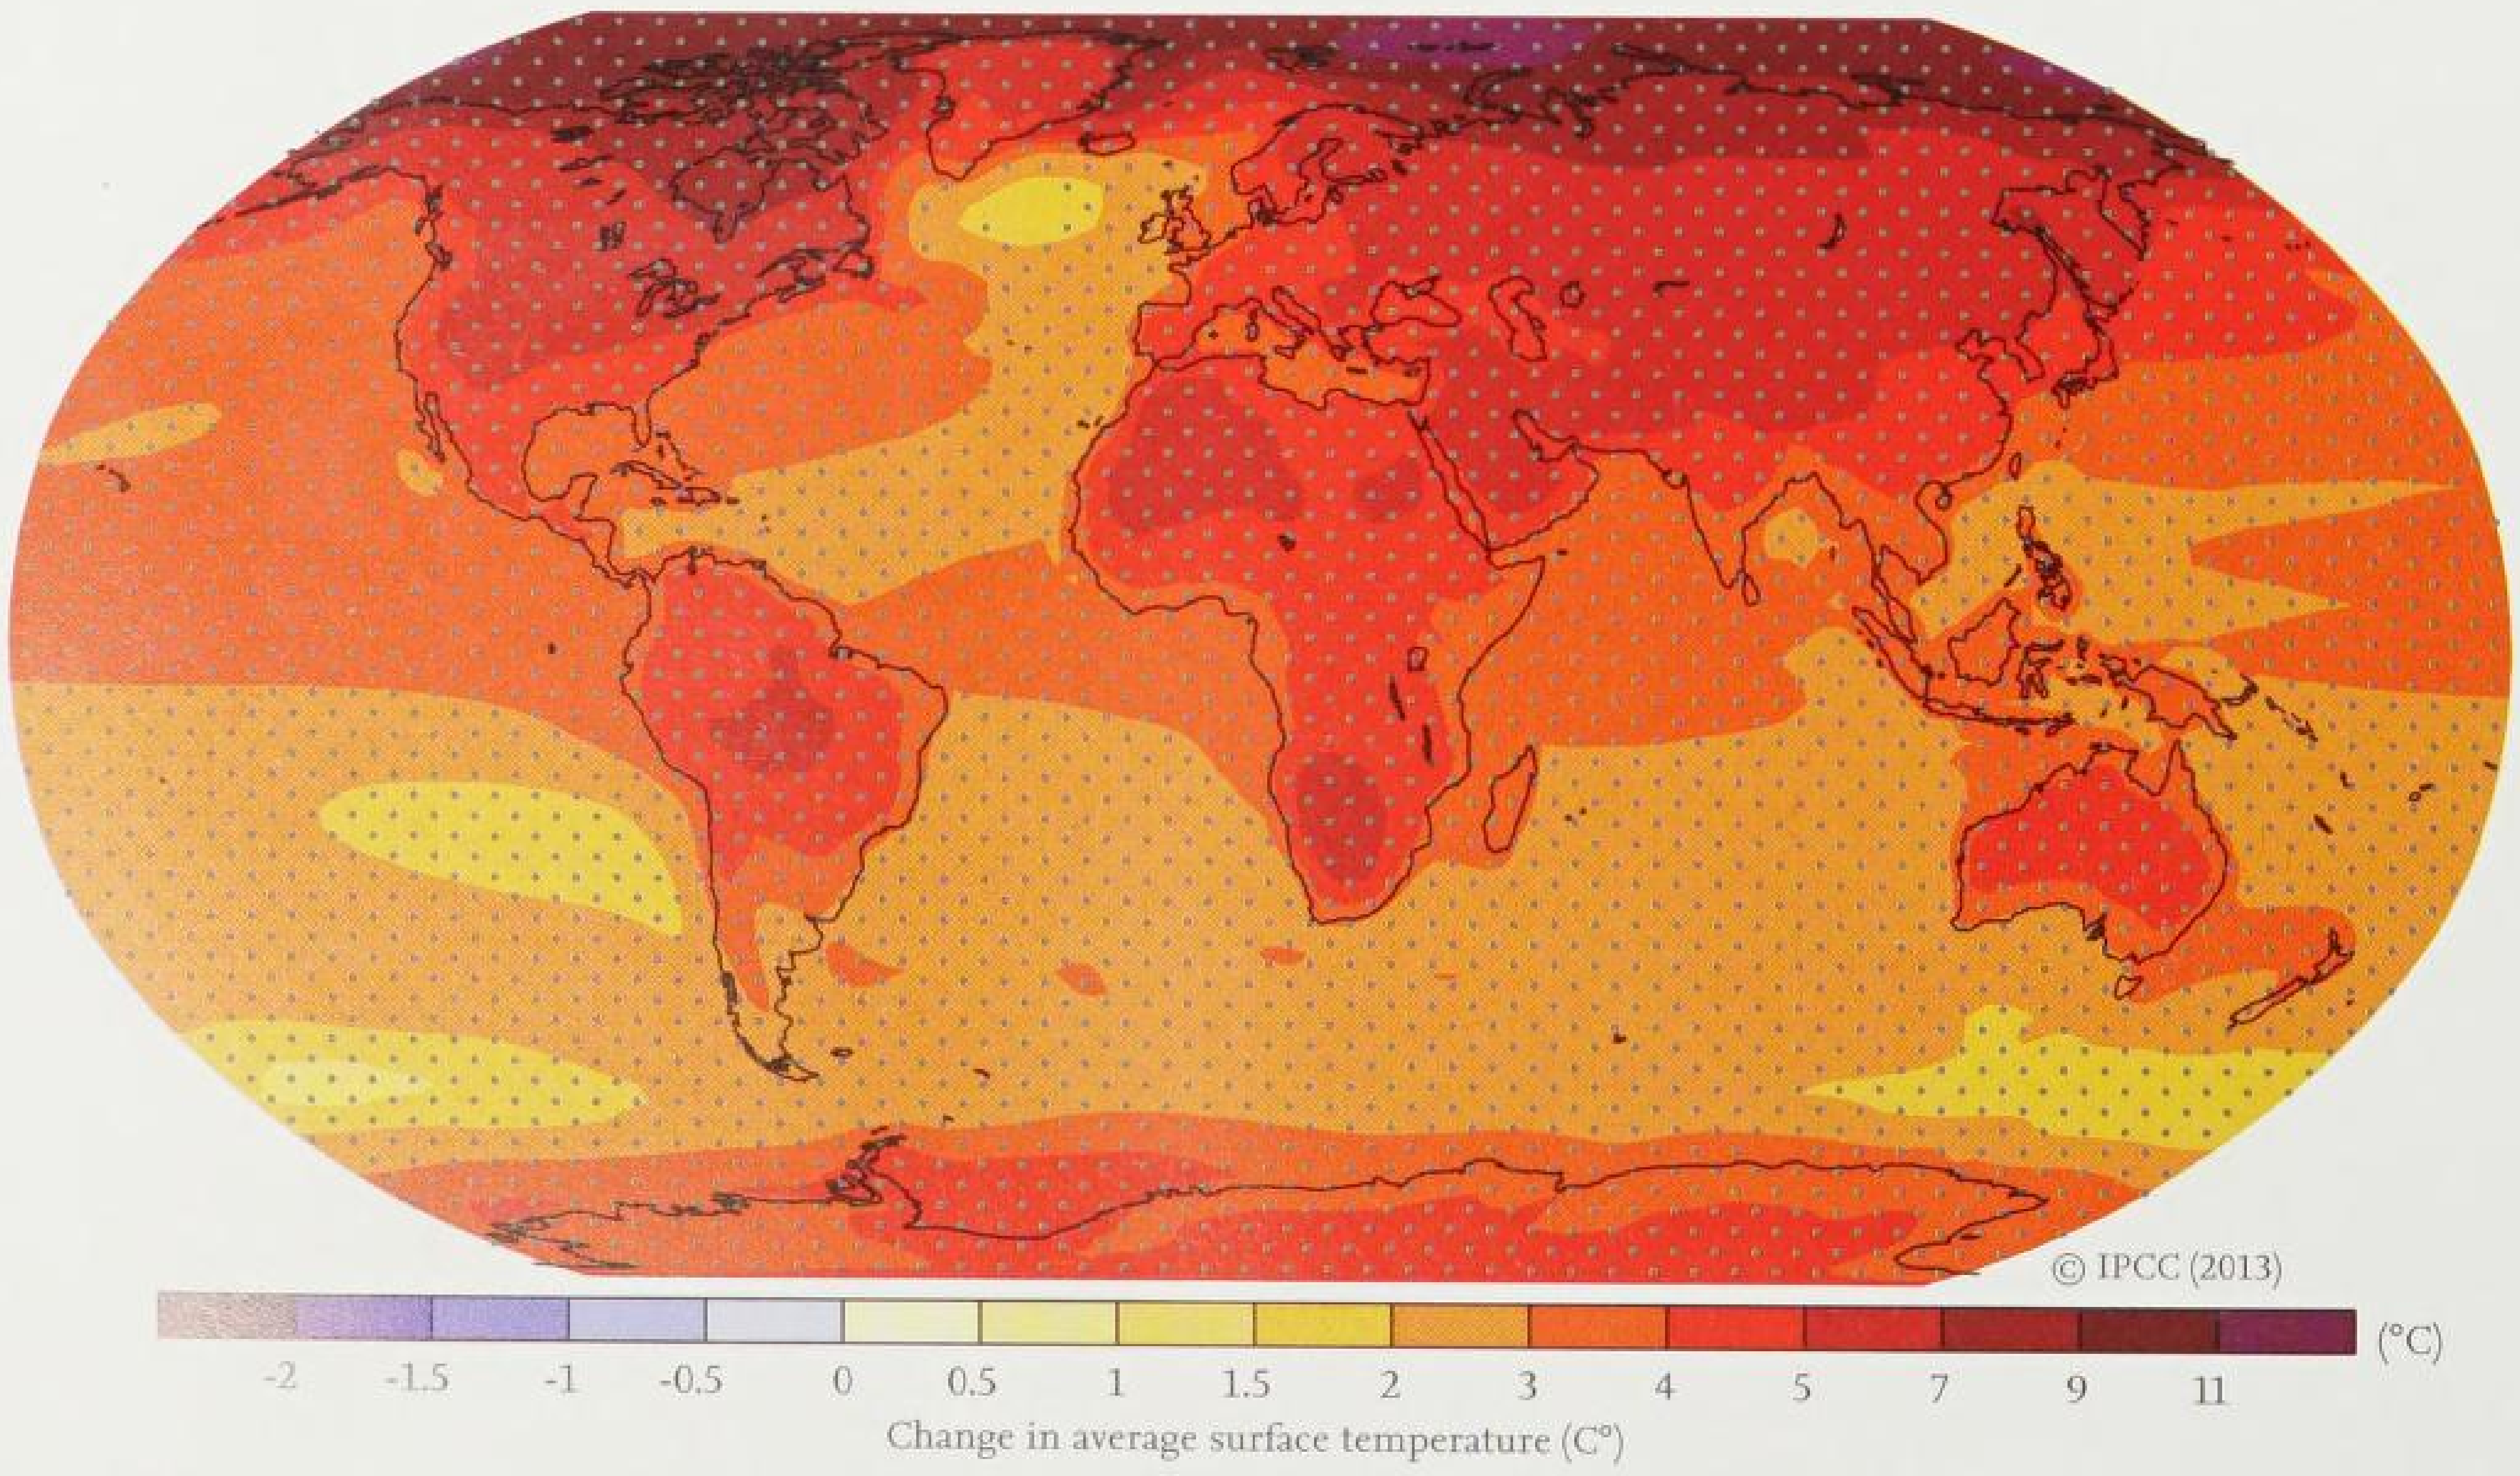
PROJECTION OF GLOBAL TEMPERATURE CHANGE 2081–2100



Faster warming is expected near the poles, as the melting snow and sea ice exposes the darker underlying land and ocean surfaces which then absorb more of the sun's radiation instead of reflecting it back to space in the way that brighter ice and snow do.

n the high-latitude regions (central and northern Europe, Asia and North America) the ear-round average precipitation is projected to increase, while in most sub-tropical land egions it is projected to decrease by as much as 20 per cent. This would increase the risk of rought and, in combination with higher temperatures, threaten agricultural productivity.

TIME COMPARISONS

Time varies around the world due to the Earth's rotation causing different parts of the world to be in light or darkness at any one time. To account for this, the world is divided into twenty-four Standard Time Zones based on 15° intervals of longitude.

The table below gives examples of times observed at different parts of the world when it is 12 noon in the zone at the Greenwich Meridian (0° longitude). Daylight Saving Time, normally one hour ahead of local Standard Time, observed by certain countries for parts of the year, is not considered.

INTRODUCTION TO THE INDEX

The index includes all names shown on the reference maps in the atlas. Each entry includes the country or geographical area in which the feature is located, a page number and an alphanumeric reference. Additional entry details and aspects of the index are explained below.

REFERENCING

Names are referenced by page number and by grid reference. The grid reference relates to the alphanumeric values which appear in the margin of each map. These reflect the graticule on the map – the letter relates to longitude divisions, the number to latitude divisions.

Names are generally referenced to the largest scale map page on which they appear. For large geographical features, including countries, the reference is to the largest scale map on which the feature appears in its entirety, or on which the majority of it appears.

Rivers are referenced to their lowest downstream point – either their mouth or their confluence with another river. The river name will generally be positioned as close to this point as possible.

Entries relating to names appearing on insets are indicated by a small box symbol: □ followed by a grid reference if the inset has its own alphanumeric values.

ALTERNATIVE NAMES

Alternative names appear as cross-references and refer the user to the index entry for the form of the name used on the map.

For rivers with multiple names – for example those which flow through several countries – all alternative name forms are included within the main index entries, with details of the countries in which each form applies.

ADMINISTRATIVE QUALIFIERS

Administrative divisions are included in an entry to differentiate duplicate names – entries of exactly the same name and feature type within the one country – where these division names are shown on the maps. In such cases, duplicate names are alphabetized in the order of the administrative division names. Additional qualifiers are included for names within selected geographical areas, to indicate more clearly their location.

DESCRIPTORS

Entries, other than those for towns and cities, include a descriptor indicating the type of geographical feature. Descriptors are not included where the type of feature is implicit in the name itself, unless there is a town or city of exactly the same name.

NAME FORMS AND ALPHABETICAL ORDER

Name forms are as they appear on the maps, with additional alternative forms included as cross-references. Names appear in full in the index, although they may appear in abbreviated form on the maps.

The German character ß is alphabetized as 'ss'. Names beginning with Mac or Mc are alphabetized exactly as they appear. The terms Saint, Sainte, etc, are abbreviated to St, Ste, etc, but alphabetized as if in the full form.

NUMERICAL ENTRIES

Entries beginning with numerals appear at the beginning of the index, in numerical order. Elsewhere, numerals are alphabetized before 'a'.

PERMUTED TERMS

Names beginning with generic, geographical terms are permuted – the descriptive term is placed after, and the index alphabetized by, the main part of the name. For example, Lake Superior is indexed as Superior, Lake; Mount Everest as Everest, Mount. This policy is applied to all languages. Permuting has not been applied to names of towns, cities or administrative divisions beginning with such geographical terms. These remain in their full form, for example, Lake Isabella, USA.
